

ABSTRACT

Problem: When a contents file is acquired and played back by play back software so that the contents of the contents file are enjoyed, it is not preferable that the contents file be copied among terminal users without any restriction from the view point of a copy right.

Solving means: When playback software for playing back a contents file is set up, a client ID inherent to each playback software is given and incorporated in the playback software as well as when the contents file is down loaded to a terminal computer, the client ID is incorporated also in the contents file, and the playback of the contents file is permitted only when the client IDs of both of the playback software and the contents file agree with each other.
